

"La Virgen se pinto horizontalmente" "The Virgin painted herself horizontally"

So says a book from Mexico, a volume titled Enciclopedia Guadalupeana, one of four encyclopedias about Guadalupe. I discovered the books right here in Chicago at the Newberry Library, 60 W. Walton. There I found the article, on this topic, on page 102 of the first volume. What a feeling of accomplishment !!!

The following sites have information about the encyclopedias.

This site <http://www.holymary.info/thewaytheimageappeared.html> has an explanation, by John Riedell, of why Mary's image was not created vertically. Juan Diego was about 63" tall so deducting 11" for his head and neck and 3" up from the ground left only 49" of vertical space on Juan's body to accommodate the 56" height of the image. If the image was vertical, then Mary's head would have been crumbled up in the folds, of the ayate, at the neck and there would be two horizontal seams instead of the one vertical seam. Judge for yourself

The unused sections were cut into many pieces that were given to various individuals and clergy.

I searched to find where these relics are located. I did not find any in Mexico. I found one in the USA.

This link shows one site in Los Angeles. The article has some inaccurate information, but the relic story seems OK.

It states that a one-centimeter square fragment of the tunic was sent to Los Angeles in 1941 and is now found in the Cathedral of Our Lady of the Angels in a chapel that was dedicated to the tilma relic. In 2003 it went on tour beginning in Denver and ending in New York. It was in Chicago on the 25th and 26th of July 2003 at Our Lady of Tepeyac Church in Little Village. If I had known of the tour, I certainly would have gone to see it there.

Perhaps someone can search for the relics in Mexico. If you find any, please let me know.

The bibliography is listed from the writings of others that I have used in this paper. I have not read all of them. Perhaps someone out there could do further research with an open mind. Let me know what you find.

Anecdote:

Many Mexicans that have a child born on December 12 would name it Guadalupe. My youngest granddaughter was born on December 12 but my daughter said no. She would not name her Guadalupe because it means Wolf River,
